BATTLE FOR MARETH LINE RAGES IN UNABATED FURY; LOCAL SUCCESSES REPORTED FOR THE AMERICAN PATROLS

Again Reported That British 8th Army Has "Breached" the Mareth Line—Not Officially Confirmed—Heavy Artillery Duels—Americans Carry Out Successful Patrols in the Gafsa Sector

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS IN NORTH AFRICA, Mar. 25—(INS)—The battle for the Mareth Line raged in unabated fury today as local successes were reported for American patrols operating near Maknassy to the north.

(Editor's Note—Once again there was a report that the British Eighth Army had "breached" the Mareth Line. It came this time from the Algiers radio but was not officially confirmed. Prime Minister Winston Churchill yesterday corrected a previous announcement to this effect by disclosing the Germans had virtually recovered their defense positions after a British "bridgehead" had been thrust into the line.)

An official communique from Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's headquarters said—

"The battle for the Mareth Line continued yesterday with heavy artillery duels on both sides.

"Fighting continues in the Maknassy region, with local gains scored. Americans carried out successful patrols in the Gafsa sector.

"There is nothing to report from northern Tunisia."

By International News Service

Allied forces were on the March again in Tunisia today after smashing serious Axis counter attacks. The enemy lashed out with all the venomous fury of a trapped rat. The British Eighth Army was pressed back at some points by the overwhelming weight of the German assault on the northern end of the Mareth line, but held on grimly to positions within the fortifications.

American columns driving eastward to the coast behind Nazi Field Marshal Erwin Rommel's Afrika Korps, and a British force which swept around the southern end of the Mareth line were reported to be making steady progress towards the ports of Gabes and Sfax in maneuvers to block the road of retreat for the enemy.

The British column, smashing towards El Hamma, was reported to be within 28 miles of Gabes. An American motorized column under command of Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton, Jr., was an equal distance from the coastal

RATIONING TOO MUCH; QUILTS HIS BUSINESS

Paul Van Toor, New Britain, Retires After 52 Years of Business Activity

ONLY STORE IN BORO'

NEW BRITAIN, Mar. 25—Paul Van Toor lived through a couple of depressions and survived them with money in the bank, but point rationing of food is too complicated for him to bother with in his general store here, three miles west of Doylestown on Route 292. The result:

A sign hangs over the front window of his store, and inside too: "Notice. No meat. No butter. No sugar; will close for good, Wednesday, March 31, Thank You!" Paul will be 75 in July, but he doesn't look and he doesn't act it, but he's decided to close out after doing business for 52 years at the same old stand. He's going to retire, live in the house that is part of the store building, and with his wife, Edna, who is 11 years younger, they are going to spend their time in a Victory Garden nearby.

But what's bothering the 479 residents of this peaceful community, which by the way is the second longest Borough in Pennsylvania—2½ miles—is that it leaves the place without a single grocery store or store of any kind.

Folks will have to either walk to Doylestown, three miles away, or to Chalfont, two miles west, to do their shopping, or apply to the rationing

STOCKHAM PRESENTS RESOLUTION ASKING THAT PEACE DISCUSSIONS BE HELD IN INDEPENDENCE HALL IN PHILADELPHIA

A resolution on world peace designed to present the subject as far as Pennsylvania is concerned from the State's place in the formation of this great nation and the purpose to have her cooperate in the readjustment of the world, along lines which are safe and sound has been presented in the State Legislature by Representative Thomas B. Stockham.

The resolution reads:
In the House of Representatives
March 15th, 1943

On Pennsylvania's soil the First Continental Congress assembled, September 5, 1774, in Carpenter's Hall at Philadelphia, and the Second Continental Congress met in the State House in the same city on May 10, 1775, and on the same soil of Pennsylvania the Colonies declared their Independence on July 4, 1776, in the greatest state paper of human rights ever penned.

In the same Independence Hall on May 14, 1787, a convention authorized by the Continental Congress met for the sole and express purpose of revising the Articles of Confederation, and was presided over by General Washington and finished its work on September 17, 1787.

Again in Philadelphia our forefathers corrected the weakness of its federation and boldly created a government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

Here on Pennsylvania's soil was born the United States of America. The Constitution and its Bill of Rights have given to its people, of all bloods and creeds, opportunities that, in a century and a half, have made this the happiest, richest and most powerful nation in the world.

The growth of the new nation under the Constitution demonstrates a practical, sane and tried method for further expansion whereby our guarantees can ultimately be extended to all peoples as they have been to the territorial inclusions of Florida, Texas, the Louisiana Purchase, and the Northwest Territory. In this Constitution is the seed for world peace and brotherhood.

Since all these great historic events, that have made these United States a great nation took place on the soil of this Commonwealth, it is fitting that this General Assembly should initiate a call for a more permanent union of the peoples of the world now involved in a great global struggle.

The League of Nations, the creative dream of a great American President, was planned to this end and to secure freedom to all peoples.

The wish of our citizens to extend to all the nations of the world the blessings that our form of government has given to America will create in the hearts of all people, the weary and downtrodden, and all belligerents, a hope and a confidence that we of the United States especially need at this time; therefore be it

RESOLVED (If the Senate concur), That this General Assembly hereby requests His Excellency, the Governor of the Commonwealth, to suggest to the President of the United States and the Federal Congress now assembled, to proceed by proper action in order to assure a just and durable peace, to invite representatives of all free peoples to meet for the purpose of establishing a definite continuing organization to secure and to maintain global peace as a guarantee to all the peoples of the world of life, liberty and justice; and be it further

RESOLVED, That our Governor be further empowered to invite such world deputies, when such a convention be called, to convene in Independence Hall in the City of Philadelphia, by and through the consent of the custodian of that hallowed shrine, to the end that such World Government may be born here on Pennsylvania's soil.

Supreme Court Upholds The Cressman Will

Mrs. Rose B. Cressman, second wife of the late Charles N. Cressman, retired cigar manufacturer of Philadelphia and Quakertown, has won a final victory in the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, in contest proceedings brought by his children against his will leaving her his entire $160,000 estate.

The Supreme Court, at Pittsburgh, affirmed a decree of the Bucks County Court at Doylestown, upholding the validity of the will and refusing to order a jury trial demanded by the Cressman children.

Three months before his death in 1940, Cressman, 79, married Miss Rose Beer, 54, of Perkasie. She had been his secretary for 35 years. His first wife had died in 1939. The disputed will was signed shortly after he had a heart attack, from which he died less than a month later.

The will was contested by Cressman's children on the grounds that their father lacked testamentary capacity and was subject to undue influence.

The children by his first wife are C. Harold Cressman and Mrs. Marian L. Hollenback, the wife of Councilman William M. Hollenback, of Philadelphia. Another son, Edward L. Cressman, of Quakertown, died after the will contest was under way.

LATEST NEWS BULLETINS

High Praise for American Pilots and Bombardiers

London—High praise for the work of American pilots and bombardiers was voiced today by Brig. Gen. Newton Longfellow, chief of the bomber command of the U. S. Army's Eighth Air Force.

Gen. Longfellow issued a general order congratulating the crews for their "excellent work" and perseverance in the face of trying winter weather. From Nov. 1, 1942, to the 20th of March this year, his statement said, the Eighth Air Force carried out 28 high altitude raids and delivered over 4,000 tons of bombs.

"In general," he said, "bombing has been good and it is improving rapidly. In recent raids, almost without exception it has been excellent."

Rider College Students Strike Over "Blue" Laws

Trenton, N. J.—Students of Rider College went on strike today over imposition of "blue" laws, concerning drinking.

About 400 of the 600 students are on strike, Dean J. Goodman Gill said. He added he thought the strike would end quickly as soon as the "blue front" was informed of the circumstances.

"A boy and girl," Dean Gill said, "were at a college dance, clearly under the influence of liquor." They were suspended. Some students decided to make an issue of the affair but I feel that it will end amicably."

Germans Mow Down 40 Italians Attempting to Surrender

An Advanced American Base in Tunisia—German troops operating in this shell-pocked center of the Tunisian front near Maknassy today mowed down a group of 40 Italian soldiers advancing with upraised hands toward the American lines to surrender.

The Nazis opened fire from hill positions to the right of the Italians. Mussolini's soldiers, forced into untenable rear-guard positions by the Germans, saw the jig was up and came out to give themselves up.

Everyone of them was killed by their Axis allies. Military observers with the American forces characterized this as an indication of the desperation now being experienced by German forces whose every attempt to bend or break the American line has failed.

Three Overcome in $100,000 Fire in Philadelphia

Philadelphia—Three firemen were overcome today when a $100,000 fire swept through a pair of warehouses in downtown Philadelphia and periled the historic Old Christ Church where General George Washington worshipped.

Despite the efforts of 60 pieces of fire apparatus, the flames spread from the five-story warehouse of the Ceylon Spice Company to the roof and walls of the Philadelphia Chair Company storehouse before being brought under control.

The heavy aromatic odor of burning spices, many of which will be irreplaceable for the duration, hung over the area.

HIGH SCHOOLS TO CO-OPERATE IN THE SAVING OF CROPS

All Bucks High Schools Stand Ready To Close To Permit Pupils' Aid

LIBERALIZE SCHEDULES

Urgency of The Emergency is Appreciated by School Administrators

All Bucks County high schools stand ready to close to permit students to assist in harvesting crops that are threatened by spoilage, the county school administrators have just announced. School sessions will open in September as usual, but will close for brief periods whenever school children are needed to harvest a crop. Many liberalized provisions in the school schedules were announced which farm children may be excused from a part of each of the school days that they may be needed at home. The urgency of the emergency is appreciated by every school administrator and complete co-operation was pledged to the Agriculture Extension and U. S. Employment Service.

On a whole the farmers in the county co-operated in 1942 in keeping the school men posted on the kind of service rendered by each student and also by submitting necessary information on attendance.

Samuel Forst, County Agriculture Supervisor, will oversee the school programs. He will work with a child farm labor co-ordinator from every high school district in the county. Uniform records are now being planned whereby the work experience will become a part of the school records.

Six farmers have reported that they would have lost their fall crops had it not been for the assistance of high school children last fall. According to Paul Gruber of the County Supervisory Staff, 796 high school pupils assisted in harvesting a large variety of crops in Bucks County during 1942. Four hundred additional pupils of the upper elementary grades, who lived on the farms, were excused for half days throughout the fall when parents indicated a need for their services.

In six weeks school children will participate in cutting the asparagus crops. Falls Township schools may go on half sessions in May in order to provide adequate help. School children in normal times provided a large labor supply source for the asparagus growers. Morrisville, Lower Makefield, and Falls High Schools usually provided all the children that were needed. The asparagus growers have not yet been able to estimate their requirements for 1943. Manohar R. Reiter, Morrisville; A. J. Chamberlin, Fallsington; and Eldon J. Sowers, Lower Makefield, are ready to complete arrangements. They are, however, planning to improve upon the 1942 service.

Paul L. Gruber estimated that over 2,000 Bucks County school children

Educators To Meet In Doylestown On Monday

A meeting of principals and supervisors of public schools and principals of parochial and other institutions has been arranged for March 29th at two p. m. at the County Education Building, 75 North Main street, Doylestown, by Charles Boehm, County Superintendent of Schools. The meeting will be addressed by Peter J. Carroll, Supervisor of the Food Distribution Administration. All persons interested in the welfare of children are invited to attend.

Mr. Carroll will discuss "National Food Problems as well as the School Lunch and School Milk Programs." These programs are no longer limited to children suffering from nutritional deficiencies that are without financial ability to purchase their food requirements. The inauguration of rationing has placed all children on the same basis and, as Mr. Carroll pointed out, national welfare requires that their ration allotment be supplemented through the School Lunch and School Milk Programs.

SUBMARINE MENACE

Contradicting the protest about submarine losses—it should be borne in mind that this weapon of the enemy is still a very great menace—is the announcement by the Institute of London Underwriters of world-wide reductions in war risk rates for ship cargoes. While there may be a tendency to read into this move a better interpretation of the progress of the war against the submarines than the facts warrant, nevertheless lowering of the war risk rates is a favorable sign.

But the rate reductions are more indicative of an improved outlook for the future than of any consideration that the danger of the U-boat has been dissipated. It seems likely that as a result of repeated Allied air blows which have been concentrated on Nazi submarine centers, both in France and in Germany, it has been determined that the future effectiveness of Germany's undersea warfare will be substantially hampered.

The greatest war risk rate reductions were announced not for the Atlantic sector, where the Nazi submarines reach their peak effectiveness, but for the American section of the rate list where rates on cargoes via the Panama Canal and Pacific Ocean to India were reduced from 20 per cent of the value of the shipment to 15 per cent. This is but another recognition of a fact which is becoming the major mystery of the war, the mystery of what has happened to the Japanese submarine fleet.

The Japanese are known to have started the war with a considerable submarine fleet. Its subsequent activity has hardly been commensurate with that known size. This lack of activity has the experts bothered but not worried, for as long as the Japanese submarines remain a more or less passive menace the United Nations are able to concentrate wholeheartedly on the Nazi submarines, which are anything but passive.

A NEW MILK

Together with the intense development of dehydration a number of innovations in food products are being perfected. An example of this is a new reconstituted milk now being used by some of America's armed forces.

This new milk tastes like ordinary milk. It is made from avoset, a stabilized cream which stays sweet indefinitely without refrigeration, and from skim-milk powder and from water. Avoset is "flash-sterilized" so rapidly that the butterfat content undergoes no chemical changes while all bacteria is killed. No chemical preventives are used. Less than 1 per cent of vegetable stabilizer prevents milk solids from separating. Hermetically sealed avoset may be shipped anywhere without changing flavor or spoiling.

The demand for food promises to increase enormously in the next few years and preparations such as this may help greatly in meeting the need of a world struggling to escape chaos.

The citizen who cannot see the point of the point system is more or less out of luck.

A citizen hates to give up ration points for appeasement when politicians offer to much of it free.

Pity the poor housewife, forced to use a blue food coupon when blue is not one of her favorite colors.

will be working on the farms for short periods during 1943.

The recent conference of principals at which farm labor plans were developed was attended by Paul S. Acker and Edward Bair of the U. S. Employment Service. The plans did not include summer help on the part of the public schools. Sidney Catwaller of Yardley, explained the George School program of boarding youth to work on the farms during the summer session. Because of the many advantages offered by that plan, including recreational facilities, there will be little difficulty in getting the quota of summer farm boarders at the George School.

Mr. Gruber indicated that the pupils mainly helped to harvest asparagus and tomatoes, although, in some sections, the pupils helped in gathering hay, beans, apples, and potatoes. Springfield High School rendered a significant contribution where, agricultural students and others were under the field supervision of Roy Geismann. A small group of agricultural students alone husked 1035 bushels of corn and also picked more than 1,000 baskets of tomatoes. The entire high school was on half sessions during the fall term.

Ray Poorbaugh, Quakertown, and 200 pupils provided for a total of 2,000 hours last fall. Different teachers on the staff went along with the pupils while they were working on the farms.

Death Goes Native by MAX LONG

SYNOPSIS

When Hastings Hoyt, middle-aged bachelor, maneuvered his small boat into the cove and saw the Valley of Waimaka in Hawaii, it seemed exactly the refuge he was seeking. He expected to find only simple natives living under the thatched roofs visible from his anchored boat. But on shore, he was astounded when Josephine West, a beautiful white girl, at- tached to the boat, hailed him. She introduced a scholarly looking man as Mr. Budd who explained they are members of a colony of twelve white people "go- ing native" in an attempt to forget the world's turmoil. Hoyt is invited to the cottages where he meets lynn-eyed Bessie Delmar, who tells Budd that Bronson, her playwright-husband, is in a frenzy over the last lines of their play. They are interrupted by Herb, general handyman for the group, beating loudly on a drum to rouse the colonists for their daily swim. Hoyt is telling the story.

CHAPTER THREE

A young woman had joined Herb, pulling a rubber cap over a fluff of thick black hair. She was as brown as any Hawaiian girl, and except that she was too thin she, also, might have passed for a native. I thought that until she came closer. Then she raised her eyes. They were very light gray, arresting in her dark face, and there was a long faint scar on her cheek running from her chin well toward the right eye.

"Turva, this is Mr. Hoyt," Budd began. "He dropped into Waimaka in a sampan." Then, to me: "Miss Massie."

"A sampan?" she queried un- easily. "It was past understanding, the reluctance they all evinced at admitting a stranger, but at the time I laid it to the reported criticism of their colony by the plantation people. Turva Massie lighted a cigarette she had brought with her and proposed: "Let's go see his sampan." She letted off through a gap in the hedge and when Herb and Budd and I caught up with her on the beach she was exclaiming with what seemed real enthusiasm, "What a small little craft! It must be fun to sail her. We've all grown so used to nothing but canoes."

We had come out just where the small plank outriggers lay, and now I surmised that they belonged to the colonists. I glanced along the curve of beach to the heavy koa- wood canoes and fishermen. "There are Hawaiian fishermen here, too, aren't there?"

"Oh, yes," Budd waved toward a littered palm grove beyond where the canoes lay. "They have a vil- lage over behind that grove. Sup- ply us with fish. None of us is an ardent fisherman like yourself."

"We raise chickens and vege- tables," Herb offered.

Turva Massie wrinkled her nose at him. "If you'd only learn to eat poi and breadfruit we wouldn't have to farm so hard."

Budd chuckled. "Turva is the only one of us who has honestly gone native. Well, come along—let's have that swim."

To my surprise he turned away from the quiet blue bay and led off through the hedges with Turva.

"Don't you swim here in the in- let?" I asked at his heels.

"No, no, we've got a pool," Herb sputtered behind me. "A damned shark lives in the bay here—pet of the Hawaiians. Ruins our distance swimming."

"But sharks are harmless in Hawaii," I protested. "They'd never molest a living person."

"So the Hawaiians tell us," Budd said over his shoulder, "but we don't care to risk it. Sinister-looking devils, sharks—bad international reputations. It's fortunate we have the pool."

I had heard before of a fresh- water pool formed by the stream from the waterfall, and we came upon it as we started up the valley. It was ringed with coconut palms which leaned out to be reflected in the clear deep water. Slanting sun rays painted patches of golden light on the sandy bottom. Great tawny butterflies glided lazily above the surface.

"Nice, eh?" Budd queried with satisfaction.

I agreed with enthusiasm, and to call out gaily, "Hi, Famous!"

I saw another man approach- ing from the direction of the houses. A big man, as tall as Thornton West but not so well set up. There was a flabbiness about this one, a paunch (though I am a poor one to speak of paunches, however thin I am otherwise) and he had a dark, heavy-jawed, self-indulgent face.

"Hi, Beautiful!" he came back at Josephine, and I recognized his word as that of the man in the Delmar house. As he came up he put his arm familiarly about her shoulders. Josephine smiled pro- vocatively up at him. Her husband threw her a sharp, irritated glance and turned instantly to talk to Budd. I sensed a little intrigue go- ing on and rather wondered at it. Thornton was so much the more at-added, "It must be the seepage from this pool that wets the sand where I beached my dinghy." Turning to verify that, I saw that the beach bar completely hid the bay and my sampan. Coming down the slope toward us was Josephine West and a lean young man with powerful shoulders, dressed like herself for swimming. This, I learned, was her husband, Thornton West.

"We've been on the beach looking at your sampan," he told me. "Trim little boat. I had one once. That tackle and boom are for lowering your dinghy, I presume."

"Yes, I leave it rigged over the side as a mooring post for the dinghy—so my new blue paint won't get rubbed."

I don't remember all our chatter, but I am trying to set down things which had a bearing on later de- velopments. I admired Thornton West for his splendid physique. He had a handsome face, too, deeply tanned, a mane of fair hair and keen blue eyes, and a cleft in his chin which somehow only added strength to his features. But there were lines of worry or concentra- tion in his face which didn't seem to belong to a completely relaxed colonist. He was a fine complected, though, to the dusky beautiful girl who was his wife. That was what made the next encounter so puz- zling.

Josephine turned away from us tractive of the two men.

Delmar, keeping his arm about Josephine, announced: "The play's finished to the very last word."

The loungers on the sand did not cheer. I guessed that they were bored with the subject. But they were not allowed to ignore it, for Mrs. Delmar came hurrying up and began talking about it, paying no manner of attention to Delmar and Josephine.

"It's really better," she said, sink- ing down beside Budd, "than 'Gray Magic.'"

Budd said, "I'm glad you think it's good, Bessie. You've worked so long and so desperately to make another success."

Her round face sagged suddenly. "It's been awful—but Bronson finally came up to the scratch!"

"What's the theme of this one, Mrs. Delmar?" I asked for the sake of politeness, certainly with no par- ticular interest.

Her lips stretched again in that smile that was not a smile, and the others laughed. Turva said ac- cusingly, "They won't tell any of us. I think they're afraid we'll steal the idea."

Mrs. Delmar shook her bridle head. "Say what you will, it's bad luck to tell your story before it's down on paper. Any writer will tell you that!"

SYNOPSIS

When Hastings Hoyt, middle-aged bachelor, maneuvered his small boat into the cove and saw the Valley of Waimaka in Hawaii, it seemed exactly the refuge he was seeking. He expected to find only simple natives living under the thatched roofs visible from his anchored boat. But on shore, he was astounded when Josephine West, a beautiful white girl, at- tached in fashionable bathing togs, hailed him. She introduced a scholarly looking man as Mr. Budd who explained they are members of a colony of twelve white people "go- ing native" in an attempt to forget the world's turmoil. Hoyt is in- vited to the cottages where he met lynn-eyed Bessie Delmar, who told Budd that Bronson, her play- wright-husband, was in a frenzy over the last lines of their play. Talk was interrupted by Herb, gen- eral handyman for the group, beat- ing loudly on a drum to rouse the colonists for their daily swim. A shark, pet of the natives from the nearby Hawaiian village, forces the colonists to confine their swim- ming to a beautiful, natural pool. Hoyt senses an intrigue, when boorish Bronson Delmar places his arm about Josephine West, despite her good-looking husband's obvious irritation. Turva Massie, whose dark beauty is marred by a long scar on her right cheek, chides the Delmars because they won't di- vulge the theme of their play. Hoyt is telling the story.

CHAPTER FOUR

Herb sat up purposefully. "There come Doc and his folks—now we can get down to a good hard swim."

I saw a lank youngish man and an elderly woman approaching and asked, "Do you mean to say you have a medico here?"

Budd said, "It wouldn't be safe not to have, Bessie. You've worked so long and so desperately to make Latham—he's here for the health of a member of his family."

The doctor had on a bathing suit, but the gray-haired woman—who turned out to be his mother—was evidently taking no orders from Herb: she was dressed in a comfort- able blue house dress and wore not only sensible shoes, but stockings. They were a pleasant-looking pair

—though, like the others, they both looked me over pretty sharply. Dr. Latham had a homely face with a rugged kind of strength as well as a certain sadness in it, and a loose- limbed way of moving which was quick but awkward. His mother was a sturdy type—there was ap- parently nothing the matter with her health—and she looked depend- able in an old-fashioned way, like farm women I had known in my childhood. She said with a smile that took away any sting in the words:

"So you're loafing, too, Mr. Hoyt? My, I'd rather be busy, even if it was getting up my own coal from the cellar!" She looked severely at Herb. "I don't take my exercise any set hour—nor to the bang of a drum, either."

Herb waved a plump apologetic hand and said plaintively, "It was just an idea," and Mrs. Latham laughed and sat down beside him in the sand.

It must have been then that I saw Elaine again—the birch tree girl. There was no proper introduction, so I did not learn her last name. Elaine, they called her, and she remained that to me. I thought she had probably come up behind the Lathams. She was looking at me intently as if trying to place me in her mind. When my eyes met hers she came straight to me and said eagerly, "When did you leave the States?"

"About three years ago," I told her.

"Did you ever see me there?" she asked with curious intensity.

Dr. Latham intervened quickly as if to protect her. "Elaine's evi- dently wondering where she's seen you before, Mr. Hoyt. A fancied re- semblance, no doubt."

I glanced around the group, counting them. "Where are the other two? You said there were twelve, Mr. Budd."

"Oh, the Crabs went up to the plantation to catch a ride into town. Gwen wanted to send those ter- rible knitted articles to England, didn't she, Turva?"

"Yes," Turva said, "and Gerald needed more paper for his inter- minable book." She lit another cigarette.

"The Crabs?" I queried. "I knew some people by that—"

They all laughed. Budd said, "Rawson is the name—but they're researching on the nature and habits of crabs, of all things. By the way, Mr. Hoyt, what was your line before you retired?"

I told him, and though they all began asking questions it was some minutes before I realized I was being cathected. They wanted to know where I had been in the States, to check with me on places familiar to them. At the time I wondered only if they were hom- ick, after all, in spite of their ap- parent contentment with the simple life.

Herb finally got restless and stood up. "We got to swim before dinner—if folks don't keep them- selves fit, this climate gets 'em."

They all rallied to him and began to get to their feet. I liked the good- natured way they treated Herb, who, I felt, might easily become a pest.

Budd said cordially, "Mr. Hoyt, won't you get your bathing togs and come back for a swim? And stay to dinner with me?"

"Thanks, but I've things to do aboard—I'll have to get the place shipshape so I can invite you all out there."

"Then come back this evening," he urged. "We'll all gather at my house, the one at the far end from Delmar's."

The others within earshot secon- ded the invitation warmly. All distrust of me, the stranger, seemed to have vanished. I promised to re- turn and took my leave.

Back on the sampan I got one small and very lonesome fish from the large ice locker which was let into the forward deck, took out the last of the ice for my tea, and swab- bed out the locker, leaving the hinged hatch up for airing.

Later, as I sat on deck before time to go ashore, watching the eve- ning close down on the incomparably peaceful scene and contentedly coloring my cherished meerschaum, I felt grateful to the lively amus- ing colonists for not opposing my stay.

I had no premonition that I should come to hate them for keep- ing me there against my will.

Russian forces resumed the offensive in the Caucasus after a lull of several weeks in fighting on this front and recaptured the town of Abinskaya, 25 miles northeast of Novorossisk, Black Sea port where remnants of the Axis Caucasus armies have massed for an evacuation by sea to the Crimea.

Meantime the Soviet spearheads are driving on Smolensk from three directions pushed closer to this vital winter base.

Stubborn Red army resistance frustrated all enemy attempts to establish bridgeheads on the east bank of the Dnieper Donets.

The German counter-offensive on the southern front appeared to have spent itself for the time being.

The RAF and the German Air Force traded heavy blows in a series of day and night raids. Following daylight raids on railway targets in northern France, the British sent squadrons of speedy mosquito bombers against targets in northwest Germany as dusk fell over the Reich.

The Germans, who had methodically demolished a school on the English coast during the afternoon, launched a series of widespread raids on central and southeast Scotland and northeast England during the night.

It was the heaviest enemy attack in recent weeks. The Air Ministry announcement indicated that the attacks had caused considerable damage.

Pupils of the English School, which was destroyed by ten enemy dive-bombers, had taken refuge in a nearby shelter before the attack began and there were no casualties in this raid.

One mosquito bomber failed to return from the night attack on Germany. Three enemy bombers were shot down over Scotland. In both Scotland and England the enemy raiders got a hot reception from the improved British ground defenses.

Maj. Gen. Ira C. Eaker, commander of the Eighth U. S. Air Force, cheered all Britain with the announcement that new and more powerful American heavy bombers will soon be in action against the enemy.

The new type Fortresses and Liberators, said Gen. Eaker, will carry three to four times the bomb load of the ships now in service. The Fortress now carries a load of three tons and the Liberator four tons. Gen. Eaker said the new ships would be more heavily armored and would have more guns than the types which are now raiding enemy targets.

"They will be tremendous," the American air chief declared.

Reports from Australia said the enemy airfield at Gasmata, on the south shore of New Britain Island, had been knocked out of commission by the prolonged Allied bombing attacks.

A communique from Gen. Douglas MacArthur's headquarters disclosed a series of raids on enemy bases north of Australia. Medium and heavy bombers ranged from Dutch New Guinea to the Solomon Islands.

A direct hit was scored on a 5,000-ton enemy vessel off Kaimana on Dutch New Guinea, and a smaller ship was damaged by a near-miss.

Attack bombers and long-range fighters swept the Mubo area of New Guinea south of Lae and poured 30,000 machine gun and cannon shells into enemy troop positions, leaving the area a smoking ruin.

Three enemy bombers made an ineffective raid on Milne Bay, on the eastern tip of New Guinea, and a single enemy plane attacked Oro Bay without result.

Allied bombers made other attacks on enemy bases and airfields on the Kai and Aroe islands south of New Guinea, on Wewak, Finschhafen and Lae on New Guinea, on Gasmata and on Buka in the Northern Solomons.

KNOW YOUR STATE

Pennsylvania's farm cash income in the first eleven months of 1942 reached a total of $365,000,000, according to data supplied by the United States Department of Agriculture. Pennsylvania is usually regarded as America's greatest industrial state, but as a matter of fact the Commonwealth is also one of the great farming states in the Union.

Only one state in the South Atlantic group from Delaware to Florida, only one state in the South Central section of our country, and only one state in the far West exceeded Pennsylvania in value of farm production in the first eleven months of 1942.

In the value of live stock and live stock products produced in the first eleven months of 1942, Pennsylvania exceeded every state along the Atlantic coast from Delaware to Florida and produced products valued at 65% of the total output of all the South Atlantic States.

Of all the southern states from the Atlantic coast west to the Rio Grande, only Texas exceeded Pennsylvania in the value of its meat, poultry, and dairy products in this same period and only California in the 11 states.

Rationing Too Much; Quits His Business

board for more gasoline. A few have horses and don't have to worry.

"I've made some money in this business, and I'm not going to be bothered about figuring out all this point rationing," VanToor said. "I lived through one depression and had to dig down in the reserve, but I came through okay; now I'm not going to take any more chances, and then too, I'm not as young as I used to be. What's the use, you can't get merchandise to sell. I can see the handwriting on the wall. Rationing is a real headache for the small merchant who is really being driven out of business. The little fellow is being squeezed out."

With VanToor out of the picture on March 31st, his only clerk, Frank Crouthamel, who has been with him since 1916 with the exception of two years when he was in action overseas during the first World War, will be out of a job, but only for one day.

Crouthamel has signed up for a job at nearby Chalfont at Weamer's General Store, but he's going to take a day's vacation before going to work. "Crouthy" came back from 22 months overseas with the Fifth Division and asked VanToor for his job back, and got it. He's been there ever since.

"It's going to be a tough break for the folks in this Borough," said Chief Burgess Andrew Y. Michie. "And we are going to miss Paul VanToor more than anyone can imagine. I guess we will have to take the bus to go shopping."

VanToor is showing his appreciation to his home folks by giving them the opportunity to buy the bargains in his closing-out sale. He did not advertise that fact, just passed the word along. "The folks have been good to me for 52 years and I'm giving them the break as I dispose of my goods," VanToor declared.

VanToor served his community for 43 years as Postmaster, retiring from that office on January 31, 1940. His wife was Assistant Postmaster for years. When he retired from that job, to which he was appointed by President McKinley in 1897, the whole community turned out and gave him a testimonial.

One of VanToor's cherished mementos is an autographed picture of former Postmaster General Jim Farley which the latter sent to VanToor when he retired as P. M. of New Britain.

"I'm a Republican, but I think that picture is one of the nicest things I have," he said. "I served under eight Presidents as postmaster."

VanToor said that he has "plenty on the books," but added, "I'm glad to see that I don't owe a penny, so you won't have to send any Sheriff around to see me. A good bit of the credit I gave was during the depression and I've forgotten about a lot of it, but I must say the home folks right in this community are not on the list of delinquents."

The 75-year-old merchant was married on October 6, 1904, at eight in the morning, and they left town right after that on a wedding trip to Niagara Falls for 10 days.

VanToor's father, with the same name—Paul VanToor—was born in Holland in 1814. He and his wife, Gertrude, raised tobacco on a little farm in Tiel, near Amsterdam, for a living. They came to America in 1867, with old wooden trunks, feather beds, and a few choice belongings, and seven children. They came on a sailing vessel and had much bad weather, and after 49 days landed in New York.

The parents were poverty stricken, and very unhappy. They moved to Sellersville, Bucks County, and finally drifted to New Britain. The father worked on the railroad helping to lay tracks on the branch from Lansdale to Doylestown. He later worked in a sand quarry in New Britain, where he lost his life at the age of 76, when the sand caved in and smothered him to death in 1889.

The VanToors had 10 children, two of whom were born in America and one of them was the retiring general merchant, Paul VanToor, Jr., who is now approaching 75.

VanToor's mother lived to be 98.

Young VanToor served as a clerk for five years in the store that he is now selling out. He sold Evening Balletons in Philadelphia when a young man.

Kindly, hale, hearty and cheerful, much like the country squire and doctor, Paul VanToor grew up to now just about all that pulsates beneath the surface of community life.

"When I started in business," VanToor said, with his blue eyes twinkling, "I didn't know how to wrap up two pounds of sugar; now it's hard to get it."

Proudly, probably, one of the oldest of his possessions in the store is an eight-day spring clock which he has wound every Friday night for the past 52 years.

Merchant VanToor has been just enough interested in his job to perform hundreds of small kindnesses. When he closes March 31st, he will leave a definite groove in the life history of New Britain Borough.

Fleet Feels Way In Fog By Dead Reckoning

sult, star sights to check dead reckoning became invaluable. No wonder the navigator of the flagship took advantage of pauses between gunfire to take sights on stars which had suddenly come out during the battle. On many ships in this area standing orders are that the navigator is to be called day or night whenever enough stars are visible to allow the position to be calculated.

Most of the time, however, there's a starless dark gray that is sky, and a darker gray that is sea, with the horizon a vague blending of the two. For the brief period of "day," the sky turns a lighter gray and the sea a sullen black. There are no blues or greens in the winter Arctic.

Possibly to compensate for this, from the Arctic Circle south to the British Isles might often be brilliant. A thin, cold moon gleams in a clear sky glowing with northern lights, which flicker almost as though signaling, then thrust out a luminous finger which reaches for a new portion of the sky. Through the finger the lights flow in a queer panoply of cold colors until the entire patch of light has shifted its position, a giant celestial imitation of an amoeba under the microscope.

The navigator probably would trade you all the northern lights, with the moon thrown in, for a dependable set of stars to stay with him north of the Arctic Circle. With wartime's minefields and rapidly shoaling waters as hazards in making a landfall, even the best dead reckoning leaves room for doubt.

Even in the midday light, it's difficult enough. At one time when the destroyer in which I made an extensive Arctic patrol was making a port in Iceland below the Arctic Circle, I learned how deceiving fog and half-light can be. We seemed barely 200 yards from shore, where I could see a white pillar some 12 or 15 feet high. Actually we were more than a mile off shore, and the charts showed the "pillar" to be a lighthouse more than 80 feet high!

We had groped in for our landfall in the dark of night, navigating to a certain extent by the ocean bed. A sounding device told the navigator when we passed the 100-fathom depth, and when we passed the 50-fathom depth. Between these two times, he knew, we had covered a known distance on a known course. He was then able to fix our position fairly accurately by locating on his charts the particular section of coast where that information would fit the way irregular lines marking the 50 and 100-fathom depths around the coast.

Once located, north of the port we sought, we ran in to within visibility distance of the high bleak cliffs separating the Icelandic fjords, and felt our way down the coast until known landmarks indicated the fjord we were after and the "12-foot pillar" confirmed it. It may sound simple, but with minefields to avoid, the first mistake could easily be the last.

Our troubles weren't over. From the flat-topped, serrated cliffs whose waterfalls were blown away into clouds of mist halfway down, a blinding snowstorm whirled suddenly down at us as we entered the fjord. We slowed down to a snail's pace, stationed lookouts in the "eyes of the ship"—the very tip of the bow—and then groped in to the boom guarding the harbor.

We found the boom. That was the trouble—we were looking for the gap in it. We backed away, glided off to the right; no luck. We backed again and slid along the boom to the left. Finally we found the gap, passed it. The officers started below, thinking that that first bath in a week. But the navigator was still swining his pelorus, taking sight after sight first on a tall church steeple in the village, then on a pier-head. "By Guess and by God" he had got us here, knew where we were. Now all he had to do was to find the anchorage assigned to us.

Cookies —

Baby's Delight

By Frances Lee Barton

Do you have a little tot in your home whose "I want a cookie" is a familiar demand? Do you have a grown-up who loves to dunk surreptitiously before retiring? Cookies have been popular since the first grand-mother hid the first cookie jar. Human nature never changes. Ask the boys in Service.

Chocolate Chip Molasses Cookies
3 cups sifted cake flour; 1½ teaspoons soda; ½ teaspoon salt; 1 teaspoon ginger; 1½ teaspoons cinnamon; ½ cup butter or other shortening; 1 cup sugar; 1 egg, unbeaten; ½ cup molasses; 1 cup sour milk or buttermilk; 1 package semi-sweet chocolate chips; ½ teaspoon vanilla.

Sift flour once, measure, add soda, salt, and spices, and sift together three times. Cream shortening, add sugar gradually, creaming until light and fluffy. Add egg and beat well; then add molasses. Add flour, alternately with milk, a small amount at a time, mixing well after each addition. Add chips and vanilla. Chill 1 to 2 hours, or until firm enough to hold shape. Drop from teaspoon on lightly greased baking sheet, placing about 2 inches apart. Bake in hot oven (400° F.) 10 to 15 minutes, or until done. Makes 6 dozen cookies.

Note: Chill cookie dough between bakings, if necessary.

held tonight, midnight, to enable members of the "army on the home front" who work until 12 midnight to see two of Hollywood's outstanding attractions at the Bristol Theatre. Show starts 12.30 a. m.

"The Body Disappears" and "Rhythm Parade" will be shown.

RITZ THEATRE

Jinx Falkenburg's mad mania for trinkets that spell her name, almost cost a retake during the filming of "Laugh Your Blues Away" in which the vibrant brown-haired actress currently plays the romantic feminine lead at the Ritz Theatre. The fact she had picked up the wrong purse was discovered just in time.

FLAKORN CORN MUFFIN MIX

SUCCESS! No more "bad luck" corn muffins. Flakorn's ingredients are precision-mixed. No measuring, no sifting, no guesswork. Just add egg and milk and you'll have 12 to 18 tender corn muffins at every baking.

TEAMS TO MEET IN THIRD BATTLE OF PLAYOFF SERIES HERE

Rohm & Haas and Diamond
Fives to Play in Deciding Game of Series

GAME BEGINS AT 7.30

Each Team Has Won One
Game in The Title
Series

The largest crowd of the season is expected to be on hand at the Mutual Aid hall tonight when the Rohm and Haas and Diamond teams meet in the third and deciding game of the playoff series to determine the championship of the Bristol Basketball League. A preliminary game is also scheduled, this starting at 7.30 o'clock.

The Diamond team, with the addition of Bud Keitch and "Eddie" Miksis staged a comeback last week and handed the chemical workers a lacing to even the series after the Maple Beach aggregation had won the first game, 33-32, when "Chuck" Klein scored a field goal in the last five seconds of the game.

Keitch and Miksis, two of the leading scorers of the South Jersey High School League, played with Burlington High this season and in the playoff game of Monday night showed the fans some scoring ability by amassing a total of 35 points between them. It was Miksis who scored the first field goal for the Diamond team after seven minutes had elapsed. He had just entered the game when he made the fielder.

In the fourth period of the Monday night game, Manager Nichols benched the Burlington youths to give them a rest. The difference was clearly shown as the Rohm and Haas team cut deeply into the Diamond lead until Nichols put his Burlington boys back in the game.

The Rohm and Haas manager, Jess Vanzant, knows that in order to cop the game he must prevent the Burlington boys from hitting the cords for any great number of goals. He and "Chuck" Klein will be given the job of holding down Keitch and Miksis and if they can succeed in doing this, he feels certain that his club will emerge victorious.

The Diamond team played in better unison than in the first game and for the first time this season they had a pair of high-scoring forwards, leaving the other players for mostly defensive playing. Sak, Profy, Mignoni, Boyle, Woolley, and Wollard are the other members of the Diamond team who will see action in the contest.

Rue, Rice and DeLuca, besides the guards already mentioned, will be the starting line-up for the Maple Beach aggregation. DeLuca seems to be leading the scorers of the chemical workers' squad while Klein is the most dependable player in the pinch. Vanzant led his team in scoring in Monday night's tilt with 14 points.

Mike DeRisi who is in charge of the preliminary game for tonight has announced that the Farruggio team, champions of the regular season of the Bristol Basketball League, will meet the Morrisville Gardens who are deadlocked for first place in the Trenton Metro League.

In the Morrisville line-up will be such players as Bucky Bucknum, Johnny Zack, Frankie Wilnot, and Ted Burns, all known to the basketball fans of this vicinity. The team is managed by Jackie Carter.

DeRisi, who coaches the Farruggio team will have as his starting line-up: DiMidio, Scancella, Parr, Napoli and Baker. Earlier in the season, the Morrisville team defeated Farruggio's at Morrisville by a three-point margin.

SYNTHETIC TIRES for planes OK'd by C.A.A. Another B.F. Goodrich "first"

B. F. Goodrich synthetic tires first to be approved by Civil Aeronautics Administration

• Every single piece of critical or vital equipment used on civilian or commercial airplanes must receive the approval of the Civil Aeronautics

Administration. This is because your government wants to do everything possible to protect airlines, aviators and the flying public.

Here's the biggest news yet for Americans who have followed B. F. Goodrich success in development of synthetic Ameripol tires

• For the first time, synthetic tires have been approved for use on commercial airlines by the Civil Aeronautics Administration. This approval is granted to B. F. Goodrich on the basis of extensive tests made by the company, plus the performance of other types of B. F. Goodrich synthetic Ameripol tires now in actual service.

B. F. Goodrich tires have flown on transport planes since the beginning of commercial aviation. It was only natural that B. F. Goodrich would tackle the problem of building a synthetic tire that would meet all the extra safety factors so essential to airplane performance.

The experience in man-made rubber by B. F. Goodrich goes back 17 years. The first tires made with synthetic ever sold to American car owners came from B. F. Goodrich. They were sold to hundreds of business concerns and private car owners months before Pearl Harbor. Although there is not enough synthetic rubber to make these tires available to you now, many are on the road today, still adding mileage to their amazing records. Some have already gone over 30,000 miles.

That's why every car owner should be vitally interested in this new B. F. Goodrich "first"—the first synthetic tire ever approved for use on any U. S. airline. Think what the tire on an airliner must go through. The impact of landing an 8-ton giant! The speed necessary to lift the plane off the ground. The ground-control needed to turn and stop it. So there's the answer to the question, "Can America make good synthetic tires?" America can! America has! And remember, they're B. F. Goodrich Silvertowns.

Even then Philadelphia was famous

...for its ripe and rare brew

The name of this was Schmidt's. It was a favorite then—as it is a favorite today. And for the same reasons: quality and flavor. Enjoy Schmidt's today—and you'll understand what four generations of brewing perfection really means.
